As hospice nurses, we need to have many skills, especially as we are frequently caring for people with very complex medical needs. Our care is often seen predominantly as cancer care, but, in reality, we support those with a variety of progressive and life limiting illnesses.

Due to an aging population, there will be far greater demand for our services in the future. By 2040, the number of people dying in England is expected to have increased by 25%. This, in turn, is likely to see the number of people with advanced illnesses and those requiring the support of a hospice at the end of life grow, and we recognise nurses will be vital in meeting this need.

Over the last year, we have cared for 1,203 people living with cancer. We also supported 237 people with neurological conditions, and 432 others with chronic disease such as heart disease. The complexity of our patients' needs is increasing, adding to the growing need for appropriate skill diversity within our nursing teams to ensure our care remains outstanding.

What I love most about nursing is being able to make a patient feel they are being listened to, and knowing we are doing all we can to help them. When a patient is so grateful for the help you have given, that's when you know you're doing the right job!

Sarah Danks, Registered Nurse,
Alan Hudson Day Treatment Centre

I love being part of a team who put patients first. Providing the highest standard of care, at one of the most difficult and emotional times for patients and their families. It is a privilege to be there for them.

Jane Radziszewski,
Palliative Community Sister

From the bottom of my heart, an enormous thank you [...] from walking in, seeing how much pain he [Dad] was in, putting him back in bed, giving him the pain relief that he so desperately needed, putting things in place for the next day, speaking to the GP and sending your girls in. You were my lifeline that day. I finally felt I had found someone who got it. My only regret is that we didn't find you sooner. Thank you for doing what you do and making a difference.

Patient's Family member,
received Hospice at Home care

By taking part in hospice fundraising events and initiatives, like Sponsor a Nurse, you will help make a big difference. Our hospice nurses work across Cambridgeshire, Wisbech and the Fens. A large proportion of our services are within our patients' homes, local to you. Our nurses work from our Inpatient unit in Cambridge, from the Alan Hudson Day Treatment Centre in Wisbech, they give specialist support to care homes, deliver day and night care in the community through Hospice at Home, and are available out of hours by telephone through our Palliative Care Hub phone service on NHS 111 option 3.
